On the one hand, ~~can~~<sup>could</sup> the Roman Catholic Church, which judges it impossible, for theological reasons, to ordain women, recognize such ordinations in the Anglican Communion? How ~~can~~<sup>could</sup> she hold such ordinations impossible for her, yet possible for the Anglican Communion?

On the other hand, many Anglicans find it difficult to accept the official Roman Catholic position (as expressed, e.g. in the Declaration) that the Ministry of the Church is not open to this development. For many Anglicans consider it to be both faithful to tradition and to express a legitimate new development. <sup>Within</sup> ~~In~~ the tension and <sup>divergence</sup> ~~disagreement~~ which they are <sup>expressing</sup> ~~expressing~~ over this question, the autonomous Provinces of the Anglican Communion believe they ~~can~~<sup>are</sup> ~~express~~<sup>ing</sup> their real sense of unity <sup>in diversity</sup> ~~and identity~~.
