INTERNATIONAL ANGLICAN-ROMAN CATHOLIC COMMISSION FOR UNITY AND MISSION

The second ~~annual~~ meeting of the International Anglican-Roman Catholic Commission for Unity and Mission (IARCCUM) ^{was held} met in Malta from 19 to 23 November 2002.

The new body, focussing on communion in mission, was launched a year ago in ^{Canterbury} ~~Canterbury~~ and Rome with strong encouragement for its work by the Archbishop of Canterbury and Pope John Paul II. At that meeting the Commission began to work on three projects to make further progress towards visible unity between the Anglican Communion and the Roman Catholic Church which will strengthen the mission of the Church of Christ. A sub-group of the Commission worked during the past year to prepare a first draft of the ^{common} ~~common~~ statement which will formally express the degree of agreement in faith that exists between Anglicans and Catholics, consolidating the results of more than thirty years of dialogue and proposing to commit the dialogue partners to a deeper sharing in common life and witness. A second sub-group met and prepared practical recommendations for the next steps in the on-going process of ecumenical reception. The third sub-group focussed on visible and practical outcomes of spiritual communion with proposals for pastoral and practical strategies to help the two communions, especially in local contexts, to do together even now whatever is possible in the present stage of real but imperfect communion. Special attention was given to Anglican-Roman Catholic Relations in Africa where there are very large numbers of both Anglicans and Roman Catholics.

During the plenary meeting the preparatory work was presented and discussed very thoroughly. Many suggestions were made to strengthen the ^{Joint Declaration} ~~Joint Declaration~~ and the drafting will continue in preparation for a future full Commission meeting. From its experience as an international meeting of bishops, the Commission stressed the importance and fruitfulness of episcopal cooperation and encouraged its expression both locally and regionally. ~~The Commission will be authorizing work by Anglican and Roman Catholic canon lawyers to reflect on possible steps appropriate to this intermediate context as we continue to journey towards full visible unity.~~ At this stage, the Commission believes that the process of reception should focus on a growth in mutual understanding and the study of ARCIC texts in view of the preparation of a common ^{Declaration} ~~statement~~. An initial proposal has been set forward for the production of a video to facilitate reflection on the developing relationships between Anglicans and Catholics worldwide.

^{Cardinal Walter Rasper of the PCPCU joined} the Commission on its final day and shared with us his extensive and helpful experience of ecumenism. The meeting was held at Mount St Joseph Retreat House, overlooking St Paul's Bay. Thirty-five years ago, a preparatory commission which set a course for future Anglican-Roman Catholic relations met in this same house, and produced the Malta Report. Members of the Commission pondered the progress which has been made over the past decades, and noted the continuing relevance of the insights of their predecessors. A distinctive characteristic of this Commission is its emphasis on the experience of common prayer and worship within its meetings.

The Commission was greeted with warm hospitality by the Catholic and Anglican communities in Malta, and ^{was} ~~were~~ especially grateful for the Evensong hosted by Canon on its final day and shared with us his extensive and helpful experience of ecumenism
